iso is the Free program used to create the partitions. There is no any complications with the discs when I put them into my computer. However, I cannot boot up on one of my discs. They just seem like they are scratched. I would like to just clone them or delete them. Do you think I can do this and still boot up on my computer? I am using the Linux program. Thank you for your help. A: There are two aspects to this question: How do I clone a CD/DVD-ROM disc? How do I burn a CD/DVD-ROM disc so that I can create a bootable CD/DVD-ROM disc? For the first part, you don't need a tool to do this. If you open the drive containing the CD-ROM or DVD-ROM, and there is a button that says "Make a copy" on the GUI, then you just click on that.

If there is no such button, then you'll need a tool. If you're using Windows, you can use Microsoft's own Disk Imaging and Recovery tool: If you're using Linux or Mac OS X, then you'll need a tool that does the job for you. There are plenty of them, and they'll come in a wide variety of GUI and command line flavors.
